

Final Report: Boards and Committees

Government of South Australia

Foreword from the Premier

Reforming boards and committees is a significant step towards making government more accessible, simpler and more efficient.

Business and community expectations have changed, and the way government works needs to change with them.

Too often, the views that are provided to government are confined to a select group of people. At the heart of this reform is my government's intention to bring people closer to the decision making process, so that more South Australians have the opportunity to be involved in the decisions that are important to them.

In July 2014, I announced that every government board and committee would be abolished unless it could demonstrate that it had an essential purpose that could not be fulfilled in an alternative way. Our proposal was bold, but necessarily so – there were 429 boards and committees included in the scope of this reform.

Given the scale of the reform, it was important that stakeholders had a say. On 22 September, I released an interim report about the government's proposed approach to each board and committee. The government has carefully considered the feedback we received in response to this report in making our final decision.

This report represents the final outcomes of the boards and committees reform.

The outcomes of this reform are:

- abolish 107
- merge 17
- other reform 62
- subject to further investigation 33
- reclassify 120
- retain 90.

The Statutes Amendment (Boards and Committees-Abolition and Reform) Bill 2014 will give effect to a number of these changes. My government will also progress a range of non-statutory reforms that deliver these outcomes.

With fewer boards and committees, the government will improve and build innovative forms of engagement to reach more members of the community, business and industry.

Reforms to simplify board operations will end over-reporting, reduce administration and cut red tape.

The South Australian Government is committed to realising the vision of a modern public service, and resetting the way we work with business and the community. I invite you to consider the final outcomes of our reform.

1. OVERVIEW

a. What did we set out to achieve?

This reform has focussed on ensuring the most representative and innovative models of engagement are being used to make and shape government decisions.

Boards and committees are one way of incorporating different perspectives in government decision making, but they are not always the best way.

In reviewing all government boards and committees, we were guided by the need to:

- allow more direct and open access to government
- reduce red tape
- enhance productivity
- improve accountability and governance.

Examples of changes that reflect these aims are below.

Open government and direct access

Over reliance on boards and committees can reduce opportunities to work directly with the community. For example, we are abolishing the Community Engagement Board and focusing instead on directly engaging the community using innovative engagement initiatives.

Through initiatives such as Citizens' Juries, GovChat, YourSAy and Country Cabinet, the government is looking to directly encourage community participation in decision making.

Reduce red tape

Boards and committees can cause unnecessary complexity. The Kangaroo Island Futures Authority will be abolished from 2015, with functions to be transferred to the Commissioner for Kangaroo Island. A single Commissioner, appointed in consultation with the Kangaroo Island Council and the people of Kangaroo Island, will streamline bureaucracy and reduce red tape.

Once passed into legislation, the Commissioner's role will be to consult with the local community to improve the coordination and delivery of government infrastructure and services on the island.

Improve accountability and governance

These reforms also provided an opportunity to revisit the governance structures of those boards and committees being retained. The South Australian Multicultural and Ethnic Affairs Commission (SAMEAC) will be retained, but its role and mandate will be refreshed to ensure it continues to best service the communities it represents. All sub-committees of the SAMEAC are being abolished to ensure the new governance arrangements support its refreshed role.

Enhance productivity and performance

This reform has also provided an opportunity to identify duplication and overlap, and opportunities for better alignment. The merger of the functions of the Adelaide Dolphin Sanctuary Advisory Board, Wilderness Advisory Committee, Marine Parks Council, Marine Parks Scientific Working Group and the National Parks and Wildlife Councils into a single Parks and Wilderness Council will result in enhanced productivity and performance. Locating these functions in a single body will facilitate streamlined, efficient decision making from a holistic perspective.

b. What are the final outcomes?

There were 429 government boards and committees included in the scope of this reform.

Decisions have been informed by engagement with stakeholders (through ministers and their departments), and by using assessment criteria (refer to Volume 3 of the Boards and Committees: Interim Report available at www.yoursay.sa.gov.au).

A summary of the outcomes of this reform is below, with more detail provided in Section 2 of this Report:

- abolish 107
- merge 17
- other reform 62
- subject to further investigation 33
- reclassify 120
- retain 90.

Note: Of the 17 merged entities, once reforms are complete 6 will be retained.

c. Did anything change between the Interim and Final Report?

On 22 September 2014, the Boards and Committees: Interim Report was released. It is available at www.yoursay.sa.gov.au.

Its release provided further time for consultation and consideration of the reform options proposed.

Since then, some changes were made to take into account additional feedback received, further policy or legal advice and optimal governance models.

In summary these changes are:

d. When do these reforms start?

The Statutes Amendment (Boards and Committees-Abolition and Reform) Bill 2014 will be introduced to Parliament and will give effect to a number of these changes. A number of boards are being reformed through changes to regulation that do not depend on passage of the Bill.

Ministers will lead the reform of boards and committees that are not established through legislation. A number of reforms will occur by 30 October 2014, however, some reforms will take longer due to additional consultation, further technical advice or investigating the feasibility of alternative options. Cabinet will monitor the progress of all reforms extending beyond 30 October 2014.

As part of this reform, a number of boards and committees will no longer be considered to be a government board or committee. Boards and committees being reclassified include one or more of the following:

- a sub-committee appointed by a parent board
- has members who are not appointed by the Minister or Governor (e.g. members are elected)
- a quasi-judicial entity (e.g. tribunals, assessor panels)
- an unpaid non-statutory advisory body.

Transition of reclassified boards and committees will commence on 30 October 2014.

The reform of payment for members of sub-committees was highlighted in the Interim Report. A proposal for Cabinet is being developed. Further consultation with each affected board will inform this submission.

e. What will be different in the future?

The government is committed to realising its vision of a modern and open public service.

A modern public service is one that listens to the people who are affected by government decisions, and uses this engagement to make better decisions and drive better outcomes.

While in the past advisory boards or consultative committees have been established to inform government decisions, modern engagement strategies provide a greater ability to directly connect with stakeholders and interest groups on a much larger scale. In other words, effective engagement strategies provide flexibility and open up conversation and debate beyond those at the board table.

The State Government has increased community input into decision making through initiatives such as the Citizens' Juries and the Better Together: Principles of Community Engagement - available at www.yoursay.sa.gov.au - and now this reform of boards and committees.

To make sure these reforms are sustained, new government guidelines have been developed so that boards and committees are only established if they pass a new threshold test (a summary of the test is set out below). This ensures alternative strategies, like direct community engagement, are considered before a new board or committee is established.

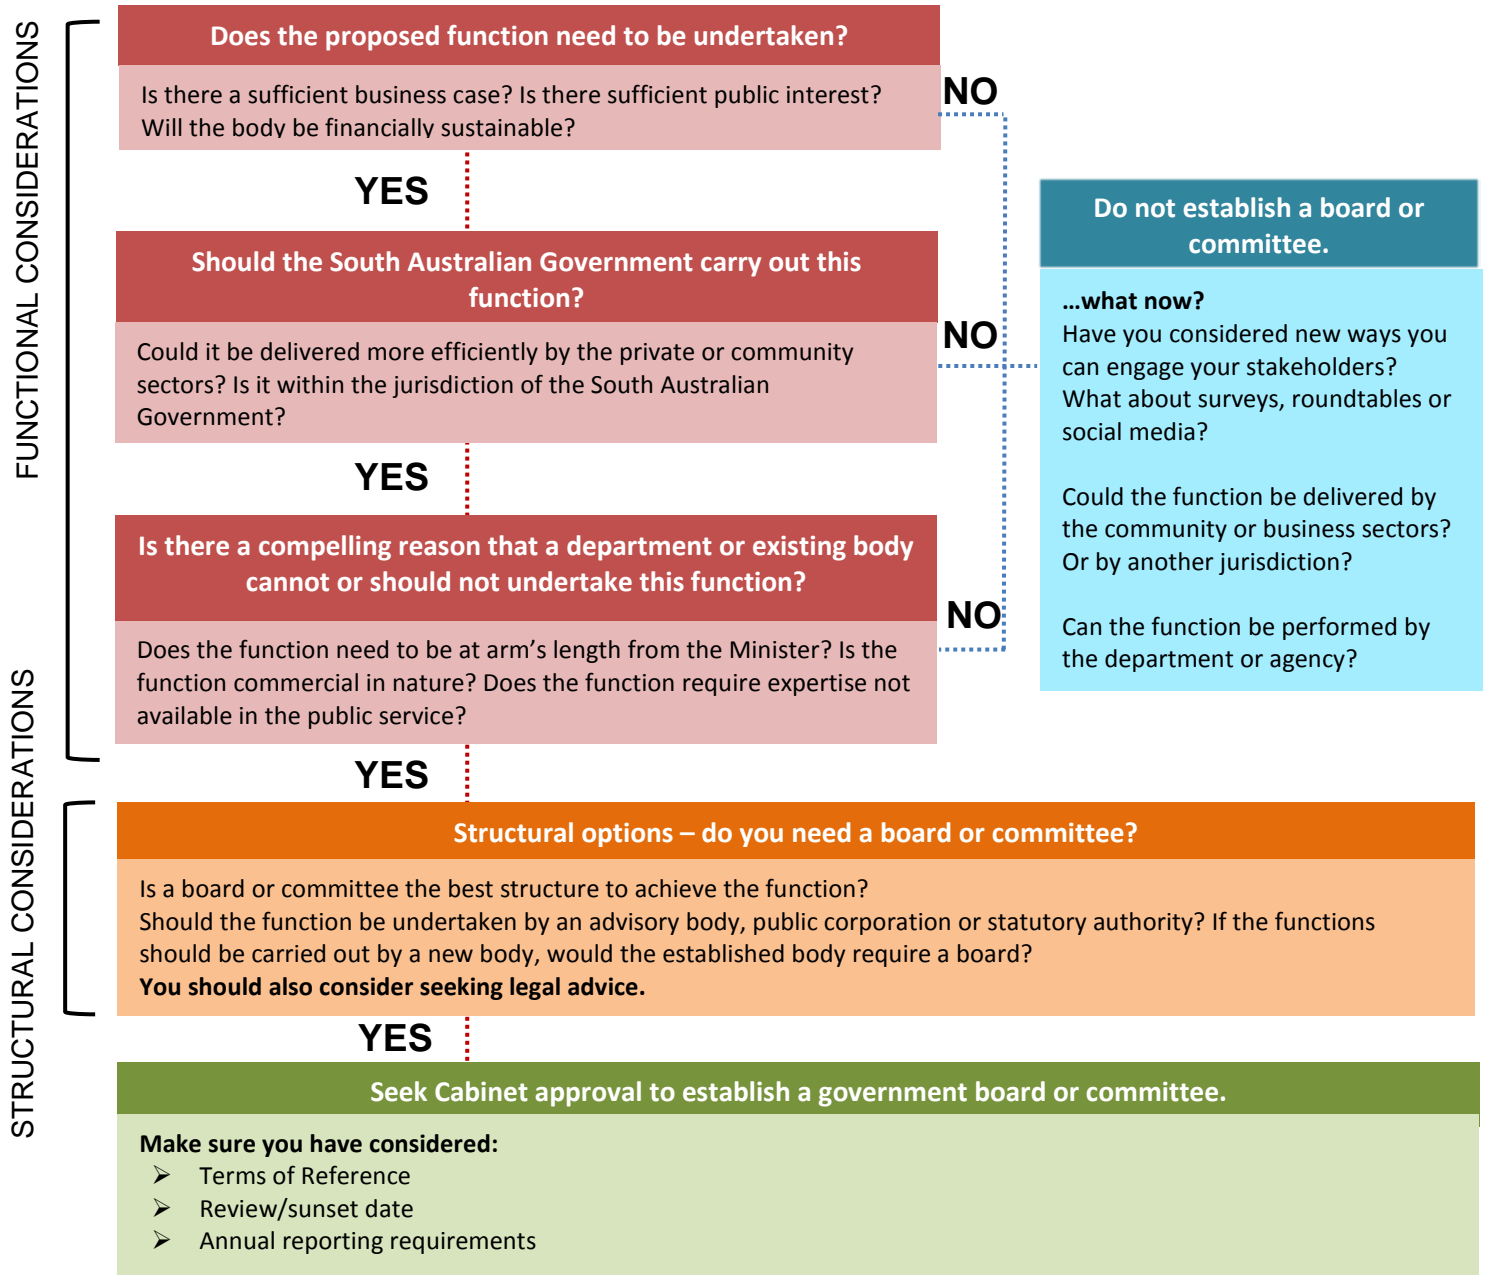

From now on, a business case must be approved by Cabinet before a new board or committee can be established.

Currently, the Government Boards and Committees Information report is tabled in Parliament annually. This report is the only place to find out who is on all government boards and committees, along with important information such as what they are paid. As part of this reform, a new online system for boards and committees is being developed which will capture additional kinds of information to what is currently reported. Rather than waiting for the annual report, this information will be available on demand via a publicly accessible boards and committees register.

Boards and committees threshold test

This flow chart illustrates some of the key factors government will consider before establishing future boards or committees. The complete government policy is set out in the new Department of the Premier and Cabinet Circular 22: Establishment and governance requirements for government boards and committees.

f. Where can I go for more information?

If you have a question about the future of a board or committee you can:

- check if the information you need is in the commentary provided in the detailed outcomes table (section 2, part b)
- contact the relevant department or minister
- send an email to DPCBoardsCommittees@dpc.sa.gov.au

2. REFORM OUTCOMES

a. Reading the reform outcomes table

The report is structured under the headings of:

Abolish: All entities identified for abolition

Merge: In most cases, the merging of two existing boards or committees

Other reform: Includes cases where future reforms will be undertaken including cutting red tape and simplification measures.

Reclassify: The board or committee is not considered to be a government board or committee. Reclassification does not mean the function ceases.

Examples of where boards and committees are proposed for reclassification include:

- sub-committees appointed by a parent board
- boards and committees where members are not appointed by the Minister or Governor (e.g. members are elected)
- quasi-judicial entities (e.g. tribunals, assessor panels)
- unpaid non-statutory advisory bodies

Subject to further investigation: This is where further consultation and consideration is required to determine whether an alternative outcome is feasible.

Retain: All entities to be retained without any reform – i.e. those exempt from abolition, where the entity performs an essential purpose that cannot be fulfilled in another way.

Under each of these headings there are three columns of information:

- Column 1 – the name of the board or committee
- Column 2 – extract from the Interim Report
- Column 3 – date of abolition and how it will be abolished (e.g. through omnibus legislation), progress made to complete investigations since the Interim Report and the next steps for other reforms, including timing.

Port Adelaide Container Terminal Monitoring Panel	Subject to further investigation	Retain Alternative mechanisms for monitoring have been suggested, including issues being forwarded to entities such as ESCOSA and the ACCC. These alternatives do not readily have the operational expertise to consider the detailed issues that arise and would need to follow pre-determined processes. In contrast to the existing Panel, engaging entities such as ESCOSA or the ACCC is likely to result in a more heavy handed and more formal approach to monitoring, resulting in significantly more cost in terms of time taken as well as resources required from industry and the SA Government. If a particularly significant issue arises at the container terminal, it would then be useful to be able to refer such an issue into a more formal environment such as an independent ESCOSA review.
